Marina's Job Interview

Last month I finally finished university and started looking for my first real job. I studied marketing and really wanted to work for a big international company. I sent my CV to dozens of companies, but only three invited me for interviews. The first interview was a disaster. I was so nervous that I arrived an hour early and had to wait in a nearby café. When I finally entered the office, my hands were shaking. The interviewer asked me simple questions about my education and experience, but I couldn't speak clearly. I forgot all the answers I had prepared at home. After twenty minutes, the interviewer thanked me and said they would call me later. Of course, they never called.

After this failure, I decided to prepare more seriously for my second interview. I researched the company's history, their products, and recent news. I wrote down possible questions and practised answers in front of the mirror. I even asked my elder sister to do a practice interview with me. She works in HR and knows what interviewers look for in candidates. The second interview went much better. I felt confident and calm. I answered all questions professionally and even asked some intelligent questions about the company's future plans. The interviewer seemed impressed. She explained the salary, working hours, and benefits. At the end, she said I was a strong candidate and they would make a decision within a week.

I waited nervously for five days. Finally, my phone rang. It was the HR manager offering me the position! I was so happy I almost screamed. The salary was good, the office was close to my apartment, and the company had excellent opportunities for career growth. I accepted the offer immediately. My first day at work is next Monday. I've already bought new business clothes and a good laptop bag. I'm still nervous, but this time it's a good kind of nervous.

I learned that preparation and confidence are the keys to success. That terrible first interview taught me an important lesson, and I'm grateful for the experience. Now I advise all my university friends who are looking for jobs: don't give up after one failure, prepare carefully, and believe in yourself.

A. Marina's first interview was unsuccessful because she ...

1) was too nervous to answer well.
2) didn't prepare any answers.
3) arrived too late.
4) forgot to bring her CV.

B. Before the second interview, Marina ...

1) did nothing special.
2) only read about the company online.
3) practised with her relative's help.
4) decided not to ask any questions.

C. During the second interview, Marina ...

1) felt the same as during the first one.
2) showed her knowledge about different companies.
3) forgot to ask about the salary.
4) remained composed and sure of herself.

D. The company offered Marina ...

1) a position in another city.
2) a job with a low salary.
3) a job not far from her home.
4) only a part-time position.

E. Marina's advice to her friends is to ...

1) give up after the first failure.
2) keep trying and prepare well.
3) never practice before interviews.
4) accept any job offer immediately.
